

Understanding what drives results

A light structure for the conversation that turns your team's results into shared understanding, and then into one agreed step.

Your role in the conversation

You are a facilitator and listener. As a manager, you set the tone, encourage a safe environment and foster healthy, respectful team conversations.

REMINDER FOR MANAGERS

Be curious

Treat the result as a signal to understand, not a verdict to defend.

Listen before deciding

Hear examples and context before moving to solutions.

Share ownership

Involve the team in what matters and in what happens next.

Start with the overall team results

Open the discussion by looking at the team's overall results. Use whichever visual supports the conversation best: this guide, a one pager, a slide deck or another results view. The aim is to create a shared picture before discussing the focus areas.

Overall results and focus areas

Present the overall results first, then show the three generated focus areas. Check what resonates with the team and guide them to select one focus area to explore more deeply. Do not try to cover all three in one meeting.

THREE FOCUS AREAS

Present all three, check what resonates, then choose one together.

CELEBRATION POINT

Notice what is working well and how to protect or build on it.

Suggested agenda

Five steps, about 35 to 45 minutes in total.

1

Open the conversation

Set the purpose and create a safe environment.

5 min

2

Look at the overall results and select a focus area

Present the overall picture and three focus areas, check resonance and choose one together.

5 to 10 min

3

Take a moment to celebrate

If there is a celebration point, notice what is going well and make it visible.

5 min

4

Dive deeper and set concrete agreements

Use the generic conversation starters to understand the selected area, then agree a realistic step.

15 to 20 min

5

Close off the meeting

Summarise what you heard, what happens next and the follow up moment.

3 min

Further guidance on each agenda point

Use these prompts as a light reference. Adapt them to the flow of the conversation rather than reading them as a script.

1 Open the conversation

Set the purpose: understand the experience behind the results before deciding what to do. Create safety by agreeing to listen to understand, make room for different experiences and discuss patterns rather than individual responses.

CONVERSATION STARTER

"These results tell us where to look, not why the results are what they are. I would like us to understand the experience behind them together."

2 Look at the overall results and select a focus area

Open the discussion with the overall team results. You can use this guide, a one pager, a slide deck or another visual that fits the context. Present the three generated focus areas, check whether they resonate with the team, and guide the team to select one area to explore further.

What do you recognise in this picture?

CHECK RESONANCE

What feels incomplete or surprising?

Which of the three focus areas feels most important or useful for us to explore?

Choose one focus area together. The manager guides the selection, but should not decide in isolation.

3 Take a moment to celebrate

If a celebration point is available, use it to notice what is going well and make the team's contribution visible. Share a few concrete examples of behaviours you see day to day, without turning the moment into a speech.

NOTICE

What is helping this work well?

BUILD

When have you experienced this at its best?

What should we protect, repeat or build on?

4 Dive deeper into the selected focus area and set concrete agreements

Use the generic conversation starters below for whichever focus area the team selected. Choose two or three, listen to the responses, ask a follow up when useful, check whether others recognise the pattern and summarise what you hear.

CONVERSATION STARTER	USE IT TO EXPLORE
 Notice	What stands out to you about this result?
 Example	What does this look like in our day to day work? Can you think of a recent example?
 Context	What was happening when the survey was answered? Was there a project, change, deadline, incident or period of pressure that may have influenced the result?
 Driver	What seems to be making this easier or harder?
 Difference	Does anyone experience this differently? What might explain the difference?
 Influence	What part of this is within our team's influence, and what needs support elsewhere?
 Meaningful change	What would make a meaningful difference?

KEEP LISTENING

"Can you say a little more?"

"What else is important here?"

"I'm hearing ... Did I capture that accurately?"

Use the deeper question only if the team wants to go further.

Set concrete agreements: check what needs addressing first, agree whether to improve, monitor or seek support, then set a small, realistic step. The manager remains accountable for follow through.

Which theme matters most to carry forward?

What would make a meaningful difference?

What is one small, realistic first step?

Who owns it, what support is needed and when will we check in?
